FRANK LEWINBERG

Frank Lewinberg is a founding partner of Urban Strategies. His training in urban planning and architecture has led to an integration of regulation and design as the main approach in his work. His public policy studies include; Living Downtown in Toronto, Guidelines for the Reurbanisation of Metro Toronto and the recently released Tall Buildings Report: Initiating Change in Downtown Toronto. He also has extensive experience working on dozens of private developments, among them the Brookfield Place in Toronto and Oak Park in Oakville. These studies and projects demonstrate the success of his approach.

Consensus building is a key part of the design process, and it forms an integral part of Frank's approach to master planning. Frank has guided a number of master planning initiatives, most recently for Bridgepoint Health, the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health and Toronto's Central Waterfront. He recently completed the Master Plan the University of Toronto- Scarborough campus. One of his early successes is the St. Lawrence Neighbourhood in downtown Toronto, now substantially complete.

One of Frank's specialities is managing proposal calls for public-sector clients seeking private development partners, his most recent projects being Phase II of Mars; the development of North Toronto Collegiate Institute for the Toronto District School Board, the Children's Aid Society of Toronto's proposed head office and the redevelopment of Don Mount Court for the Toronto Community Housing Corporation.

Frank has a long history of successful appearances before the Ontario Municipal Board as an expert witness. He regularly lectures at universities and professional gatherings and has written numerous articles on city planning.
