

YANG HUANG

With a background in architecture and landscape architecture, Yang integrates his understanding of built and natural systems in his role as an urban designer. He is fascinated by the idea of applying ecological principles to design cities as dynamic landscapes.

After finishing a major project in redesigning Bayer's Road Shopping Mall in Halifax and a thesis project in redeveloping East Bayfront in Toronto, he developed a strong interest in urban design, particularly in urban infill and waterfront redevelopments.

Yang has worked on diverse local and international projects at various scales as an intern landscape architect and student. His projects include both local and international work at a variety of urban scales.
